Commentary

According to two new studies published this month, a new mortality trend is emerging in the US as well as other high-income. The first study looked at trends across 18 high-income countries and found that most countries experienced declines in life expectancy in 2015. This is the first time in recent decades that so many high-income countries simultaneously experienced declines in life expectancy for both men and women. The main causes of death associated with respiratory diseases, cardiovascular disease and Alzheimer's disease as well as other mental and nervous system disorders. A second study suggests, however, that the problems driving life expectancy declines in the U.S. are broader than just the diseases above and may extend to opioid crisis, alcoholism and suicides, especially among young people.

The Share Class is reporting a performance of -2.21% for the month of July. No maturity has been registered this month despite the insureds' increasingly advanced age, affecting performance and liquidity.
